1.) What is the purpose of the “Parent Right to Decline” process?

There may be a situation in which a student wishes to return to school rather than receive an exemption and graduate to finish his or her planned educational program and the parent or person in parental relation would prefer the child to continue to receive educational services for a 5th or 6th year of high school. In such cases the parent has the right to decline the exemptions leading to a diploma and elect to have their child remain enrolled in school for subsequent school years until s/he passes the assessments for which the exemptions were declined, or the school year ends in which s/he turns 21, whichever occurs first. However, parents and persons in parental relation must be fully informed that declining the exemptions shall mean that in the future, their child will need to pass any remaining assessments required for graduation including those previously eligible for exemption.

2.) Are there parent notification requirements a school must follow if students will graduate as a result of being exempt from one or more assessment requirements?

Yes. At a minimum, 10 calendar days prior to the date on which a student shall

No. There may be a situation in which a student wishes to return to school to finish his or her planned educational program and the parent or person in parental relation would prefer the child to continue to receive educational services for a 5th or 6th year of high school. In all such cases, the school must have confirmed documentation that they
